The program helps you customize this specific scheme code to fit your preferences. What Realtime Singlish really does is convert Singlish, which is an English-based creole language spoken in Singapore to Sinhala, the language of the largest ethnic group in Sri Lanka. Targeting Singlish-aware users, Realtime Singlish is especially created for this particular group and only this group, thus it can only seem like Gibberish to the rest of the world. Being a low prestige language in Singapore and actively fought against by the Singaporean government, Singlish is a heavily discouraged in both mass media and schools. Its vocabulary comprises English, Malay, Cantonese, Tamil, Teochew and Hokkien terms and it still is used during friendly conversations, various coffee shops (kopi tiams) or even shopping malls. The general note states the Singlish to be a dying language though, and it may become extinct in the coming generations. Until then, software such as Realtime Singlish keeps it alive alongside typical small talk and other situations that ask for its use. In order to enable the application, you must press the Scroll Lock key. Realtime Singlish generates the transliteration right away, as you type the Singlish words. What's New In?

-------------------------------------- Singlish is a British and Australian English dialect spoken in Singapore. The Singaporean national language, is a blend of Malay, Dutch, English and other languages. The original name of Singlish was Singapore English, which later evolved into Singaporean English. The dialect is called Singlish because it is spoken by people from different origins, mainly the different ethnic groups of the country. The largest of them are the Chinese, Malays, Eurasians, Indians and Malaysians. Singlish is an English-based creole language, also known as Cockney English. It is described as the language of the masses because it is easily understood by anyone in the Singapore. However, the Singlish grammar is very different to the original British English. Besides, it is considered a fading language, because the government doesn't support it anymore. In the past Singlish was actually encouraged by the government, but nowadays it is actively discouraged. The people of Singapore started to make a big effort to rid themselves of Singlish, not by trying to eliminate it, but by isolating and hiding it from the students. If you get in touch with a Singaporean, he or she will probably tell you that Singapore is a very different place than it used to be. The future of Singlish is uncertain, but it is not going to disappear, because the Singaporean government no longer imposes the obligatory teaching of the language in schools. Even in the countryside there are still a few uneducated people who speak it as their mother tongue. Having said that, the Singlish vocabulary is about half English, half Malay, Cantonese, Tamil, Teochew, and Hokkien. While these languages are spoken, they may seem like gibberish to the Westerners and non-native speakers of them. In the past, the Singlish vocabulary was more diverse, but nowadays the usage of the Malaysian dialects have dropped significantly, and the application only supports those few. Thus, it should not be surprising if you find a lot of gibberish phrases in the application, as you will not see anything that's not related to Singlish in the background. The things you hear and see on the internet are not translated by the application. It only shows you the correspondent words. Realtime Singlish app will make you feel like you're chatting with a neighbor who speaks in his native language.
